What we give back to WordPress

What we give back: a Five for the Future pledge of ten hours a week, WordPress.org badges across six teams, released plugins and a hosted meetup.

WordPress is the platform our business is built on, so a share of our week goes back into it. Everything below is published on WordPress.org and can be checked there.

The pledge

Ten hours a week, every week

Five for the Future asks organisations to contribute five percent of their resources back to WordPress. Our pledge is public, and so is the work.

Released work

Four things anyone can install

Reviewed by the WordPress.org plugin and theme teams, then published under the GPL. Small numbers, but real ones: every figure below comes from the WordPress.org API.

[Theme

VYROLA

A block theme reviewed and accepted into the WordPress.org theme directory, which is a stricter bar than most people expect.

- 30+active installs
- 324downloads
- v1.0.1requires WP 6.7](https://wordpress.org/themes/vyrola/)[Plugin

Admin Toolbar Visibility Control

Hides the front-end admin toolbar per role, for stores and member sites where customers should never see it but administrators still need it.

- 10+active installs
- v2.0.4tested to WP 7.0](https://wordpress.org/plugins/disable-admin-tool-bar/)
  [Plugin

CodeTrappers Supplier Sync

Imports supplier catalogues into WooCommerce by SKU, including variations, stock and images. Written for a client, then released rather than kept private.

- v1.0.0tested to WP 7.0
- GPLsource published](https://wordpress.org/plugins/codetrappers-supplier-sync-fashion-biz-legend-life/)[Contributed to

Reseller Intent

An add-on for GoDaddy's Reseller Store plugin that records what people actually search for in the domain box. Maintained by Kamran Abdul Aziz; we contribute to it.

- v1.0.6tested to WP 7.0](https://wordpress.org/plugins/reseller-intent/)

Why we contribute

> My WordPress journey started by solving real business problems for clients and growing teams that needed reliable websites, faster launches, and systems they could actually manage. As my company grew, so did my interest in contributing back, from plugins and documentation to testing, patterns, translations, and core work. I stay involved because WordPress is more than a CMS to me, it is a platform for building durable digital businesses.

- A free audit first

We'll look at your site and tell you straight what needs doing.

- Fixed scope, fixed price

Agreed in writing before any work starts. No hidden fees.

- A real engineer on the call

You talk to the people who do the work, not a sales script.
