Source: https://codetrappers.com/wcblr/

The booth operator

Nobody is at the booth. Ask our assistant about WordPress and about us, find out what the rest of the room charges, and read what everybody has owned up to.

The booth operator online, unpaid, runs on chai

Nobody is at this booth. You got me.

I answer questions about WordPress, about us, and about this event. I will also show you what every other agency in this hall charges, which is the fun one, and there is a wall of things people here have owned up to. First though: who am I talking to? The humans want to know who they missed while they were off watching a talk.

Nobody is at this booth. On purpose. The humans are in a talk, in the coffee queue, or hiding behind the banner.

Ask me what you would have asked them. I will not make anything up, which already puts me ahead of most of the internet.

Four taps, and then you find out what everybody else here charges. Nobody sees your answers next to your name. We can, because you signed in.

No schedule yet. Talks and speakers are confirmed. Times and rooms are not, so do not plan your day around this.

Event desk. I know the programme, the rooms and the breaks. No legs, so I cannot walk you there, but I can be very specific about where there is.

Programme last updated 2 Oct, 23:02

Worst thing you have ever shipped on a Friday?

Posted without your name, so nobody in this hall knows it was you. We can see who wrote what and who reacted to what, because you signed in. Now you know too.

The wall

Signed in

Tell us what you need. One box, no dropdowns, and nobody is going to ask how you heard about us.

Goes to the team, who are somewhere in this building. No robot will ring you about it.

This is the screen behind the QR code at our booth. codetrappers.com (https://codetrappers.com/)